Answers:

Lorraine Hansberry

Playwright
and author

Lorraine Hansberry was born in Chicago, Illinois in 1930. When she was still a small child, Hansberry's family moved to a restricted neighborhood for white residents, which was against the law at the time. Hansberry's father took the family's case all the way to the Supreme Court, and her mother stayed to guard the home, ready to defend her children if necessary. The family won their case, but the experience affected Hansberry deeply. Her best-known work, a dramatic play called A Raisin in the Sun, was inspired by these events. It was the first play written by an African-American to be produced on Broadway. At the age of 29, Hansberry became the youngest American playwright to receive the prestigious New York Drama Critics Circle Award for Best Play. Hansberry's promising career was cut short by her death from pancreatic cancer at the age of 34.

Answers:

Jesse Owens

Olympic Gold Medal-winning track and field athlete

James Cleveland Owens was born in Oakville, Alabama in 1913. He was nine years old when his family moved to Cleveland, Ohio, where he received the nickname Jesse. When his new teacher asked his name, he replied that it was “J.C.,” as he was called at the time. Because of his Southern accent, the teacher misheard the name as “Jesse,” and the nickname stuck.

As a boy, Owens took what odd jobs he could find, working while training on the track and field team in junior high school. Owens’ coach allowed him to practice before school so he could keep his after-school job at a shoe repair shop. After high school, he went on to compete for Ohio State University’s track team. He set three world records and tied a fourth. Still, he was forced to live off campus with other African-American athletes, and when the team traveled, he stayed in “black-only” hotels. Despite those circumstances, he persisted in his training and competition and went on to win four gold medals in the 1936 Olympic Games in Germany.

W.E.B. Du Bois

Activist, journalist, sociologist

William Edward Burghardt Du Bois was born in Great Barrington, Massachusetts in 1868. Du Bois' father left the family before his second birthday, and his mother suffered a stroke when Du Bois was still a young child. He was forced to work to support himself and his mother, who could no longer work following her stroke. Despite this hardship, Du Bois remained focused on his studies, believing that his education could better their lives. He earned a degree from Fisk University, a historically African-American college in Nashville, Tennessee, then received a scholarship to Harvard. In 1895, he became the first African-American to earn a Ph.D. from Harvard University.

He taught at the university level for several years, then went to work at Atlanta University, now called Clark Atlanta University, in Atlanta, Georgia. He created the university's department of social work, which exists today as the Whitney M. Young, Jr. School of Social Work. He became founder and editor of the NAACP's journal, The Crisis, which published African-American writers, including some who wrote during the Harlem Renaissance. He argued against Booker T. Washington's belief that African-Americans should accept segregation and the idea that they could be "separate but equal."

Civil Rights leader

Martin Luther King, Jr. was born in Atlanta, Georgia in 1929. The son of a Baptist minister, he became one himself after studying at a theological seminary in Pennsylvania. There, he learned about the non-violent methods used by Mohandas Gandhi in protest of British colonization in India. King believed that African-Americans could gain their civil rights through peaceful demonstration and protest. He believed in methods such as the boycott, refusing to buy products or services from companies or people who discriminated against African-Americans.

In 1963, a civil rights march on Washington, D.C., called the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom, helped make King internationally known. It was on the occasion of this march that King made his famous 'I Have A Dream' speech. He won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964. That same year, the Civil Rights Act was passed, banning many types of discrimination against African-Americans.

George Washington Carver

Scientist, botanist and inventor

George Washington Carver was born into slavery some time between 1861 and 1864. No record exists to confirm the date of his birth. After the abolition of slavery, Carver's former masters, Moses and Susan Carver, raised George and his brother James as their own sons, teaching them reading and writing and encouraging George's intellectual pursuits. George took his new parents' last name.

A teacher at Simpson College in Iowa, where Carver was enrolled, noticed his talent for drawing flowers and encouraged him to study botany. Carver then went to study at Iowa State Agricultural College, where, to distinguish himself from another student named George Carver, he added Washington to his name. After a master's degree at Agricultural College, Booker T. Washington invited Carver to lead the agricultural department at the famed Tuskegee Institute. He remained there for 47 years, teaching former slaves farming techniques so they could support themselves.

Carver taught his students and agricultural professionals that crop rotation, the practice of planting different crops in the same fields year to year, could help soil retain its nutrients. He created many non-food products, everything from shaving cream to shoe polish to shampoo, from plants such as peanuts, sweet potatoes and pecans.
