Read About It

Directions: Underline the transition words in the paragraph below.

In the book Time to Fly, the main character, Terence, dreamt of becoming a pilot since he was in the seventh grade. Although Terence's family members were initially skeptical of his ability to actually enter the aerospace field, they knew he had always wanted to take to the sky. His mother first noticed his interest in aircrafts when she and her children would visit their local library. Instead of working on his homework, Terence would find his way to books about aerospace. Later, when Terence was old enough to drive, he would park on top of Cherry Hill where he could watch the planes come and go. Finally, Terence's mother was certain that he would fulfill his dream of piloting a plane when he committed to studying engineering in college. In summary, through Terence's efforts to learn about these machines, his family came to realize he was serious about pursuing his passion.
