THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH: Two Chambers of Congress

PART I

Use the information on page 1 to fill in the blanks.

- 1. States with large populations, like Texas, have more seats in the House of Representatives than less populated states, like Vermont, do.
- 2. Since each state is equally represented in the Senate, smaller states such as Rhode Island have the same number of representatives as larger states such as California.
- 3. The Senate has rules for debate that allow its 100 members to discuss a bill for hours. Sometimes members use this extended speaking time to try to delay a vote. This practice is called a filibuster.
- 4. The House of Representatives has 435 members. So, to allow more people an opportunity to talk, this chamber has time restrictions limiting the length of arguments in debate.
- 5. If representatives in the Senate are evenly split for and against a bill, the U.S. vice president will vote to break the tie.
- 6. The leader of the House of Representatives is called the Speaker and is chosen by the political party that has the majority of seats.
- 7. Members of the Senate represent an entire state, rather than a single district, so they must be knowledgeable about issues that impact anyone in the state.
- 8. The House of Representatives has shorter terms. This means elected officials need to pay close attention to public opinion in their districts so that they can convince people to re-elect them every two years.

PART II

Research your representatives! Write their names below. Answers will vary.

State senators: _____

District representative: _____

BONUS QUESTION:

Which chamber of Congress would you rather serve in and why? Do additional research to help you decide.