

Cherufe

The Cherufe is a mythical creature from South America. He is a lava monster, believed to live in volcanoes of the Andes Mountains in Chile. Many people disagree on what he really looks like, but the cherufe is made of magma and volcanic rock, but appears in humanoid form. Long ago many locals believed that he caused volcanic eruptions, and so they tried to calm him by throwing various gifts into the volcanoes.

Think about the geography of Chile. What geographical features are there besides volcanoes? Choose one and create a mythical monster based on the geographical feature you chose.

Draw your monster above!

What's the name of your monster?

Write a brief description of your monster.

Vocabulary Box:

Magma - Hot semi-fluid material beneath the earth's crust.

Humanoid - Having the appearance of a human.