

Gallimimus

The Gallimimus (Gal-ee-mim-uss) typically had toothless beaks, longer slender fingers, and were bipedal, meaning they walked on only two legs. Gallimimus had a small head, well suited for digging in the mud to look for insects and grubs. It is likely that this bird-like dinosaur also ate seeds and just about anything it could find.