

Election Conditions

Conditional sentences can show an if-then, cause-and-effect relationship. If one thing or event happens, then another thing or event can happen. But, the cause must happen for the effect to occur.

The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed.

Directions: Read the sentence and circle the words "if" and "then." Then, underline the conditions and effects. Lastly, complete the chart below with the correct information and if-then statements.

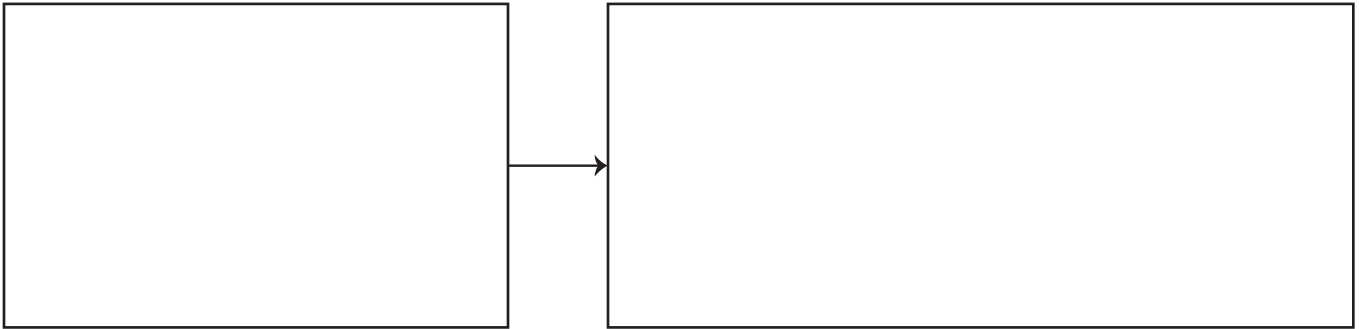

1. If no person has such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President.

→

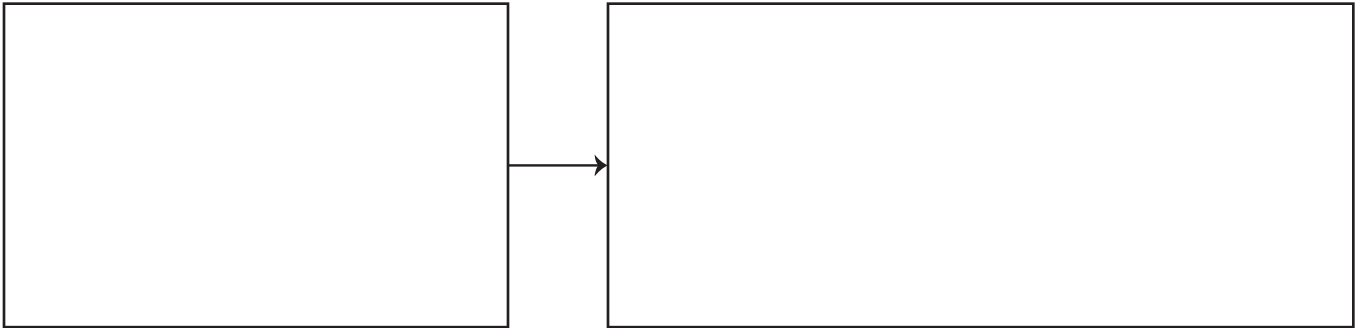

Name _____

Date _____

2. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President.

3. If no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President.

4. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed.

