

Homalocephale had a head that featured a smooth, wedge-shaped roof. This species and its cousins are famous for their thick, spiky skulls, which are popularly believed to have been used in head-butting competitions.

