

The Digestive System

Intestines

The intestines break in to two main sections, the large and the small intestines. The main function is to break down food and absorb nutrients. The intestines are lined with mucus which helps push food through the tracks down to the end.