

The Endocrine System

Pancreas

The endocrine system is a network of glands that release different hormones to regulate the body.

The pancreas is a very unique organ. It is actually a part of two systems, as it does two jobs. The main function is to create hormones like insulin and glucagon.

It also creates digestive enzymes that break down carbohydrates and proteins from foods on the way to the small intestine.