track and field, football, baseball and lacrosse. He was talented in all the sports, but he received early attention for football, where he played numerous positions. He was named an All American player in 1911 and 1912.

In the 1912 Olympics, Jim won two gold medals: one for the pentathlon and one for the decathlon. The pentathlon is five track and field events, and the decathlon is ten events. Of the 15 events Jim competed in, he won eight. His points for the decathlon set an Olympic record.

After the Olympics, Jim played professional baseball, football and basketball. He was named one of the top athletes of the century by the Associated Press. He was placed in the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1963.
