Independent Reading Template: Making Predictions

As you are reading independently, your mind does a lot of thinking. You ask questions, sometimes re-read passages, and you will also make predictions as the story develops.

For this activity, plan to read independently for about 20 minutes.

As you read, notice when you find yourself making a prediction.

- When you do, write down your prediction in the first column.
- Note the clues or evidence that you used to make that prediction in the second column.
- In the third column, note whether your prediction was correct.

Remember: The important thing is that you learn to pay attention to your thinking, not that you predict correctly.
