

Parallel Structure With Correlative Conjunctions #2

Correlative conjunctions work in pairs to show how words, clauses, or phrases relate to each other. Some common examples of correlative conjunctions are both/and, either/or, neither/nor, and not only/but also. When you use correlative conjunctions in a sentence, make sure that the words or phrases they connect have parallel structures.

Not Parallel

- Jeanine's puppy loves both napping and to look out the window.
[gerund] [infinitive]

Parallel

- Jeanine's puppy loves both napping and looking out the window.
[gerund] [gerund]
- Jeanine's puppy loves both to nap and to look out the window.
[infinitive] [infinitive]

Each sentence contains an error with the correlative conjunctions, impacting the parallel structure. Find and fix each error. The first sentence has been done for you.

offers both

- The downtown library ~~both offers~~ offers quiet study rooms and views of the municipal park.
- Marcia performed not only an original song for the talent show but also did her own choreography.
- The playwright's newest production is a lighthearted play that neither is too serious nor too complex to understand.
- For our final hour at the theme park, we could either visit the gift shop or we could ride the roller coaster again.
- Lian had to choose either to spend her remaining arcade tickets on a small prize or save them for a bigger prize during her next visit.
- Neil's dentist recommended not only flossing routinely but also to use a fluoride toothpaste to maintain a healthy smile.