Backyard Raccoons

Have you ever seen the glow of raccoon eyes near your house at night? These furry nocturnal animals can live in both wooded areas and in neighborhoods with lots of people. Since raccoons eat almost anything, including garbage and pet food, they thrive near people. Raccoons do not hibernate. Although they are very smart, curious animals, many people consider raccoons to be pests. They use their human-like hands to open many types of containers, often making quite a mess. Mother raccoons give birth to three or four babies at a time. It can be fun to spot a raccoon in your yard, but make sure your trash can is shut tight!
