

Australia, the Land Down Under

Sulphur-crested
Cockatoo

The sulphur-crested cockatoo is a large, white cockatoo found in wooded habitats in Australia and New Guinea. Because they can be very numerous in suburbs, they are sometimes considered pests. Their distinctive, raucous call can be very loud. They are naturally curious, intelligent birds that can live upwards of 70 years in captivity, although they only live to about 20–40 years in the wild.
