

Practice your Tertiary Colors

When a primary and secondary color are mixed together we get a tertiary color. The wings of these butterflies are in primary and secondary colors. They mix to form the body and a third color. Ask your child to fill in the missing secondary color in these butterflies. The first one is done for you.

Tip: Experiment with colored pencils or mixing paints together!

