

From that day on, the nightingale was forced to remain at the palace. She had her own cage, and was allowed to go out twice a day and once a night. Twelve servants were chosen to attend her when she went out, holding her by a silken string tied fast to her leg. Though she was comfortable enough, the little nightingale was not accustomed to this kind of flying...