

China

Female Traditional Clothing

Cheongsam, also known as Qi-Pao or mandarin gown, is a body-hugging dress for women in China. The name “cheongsam,” simply means “long dress.”

Most of them were made of silk, and embroidered, with thick laces trimmed at the collar, sleeves and edges.

They can be worn either on casual or formal occasions. In either case, it creates an impression of simple and quiet charm, elegance and neatness.

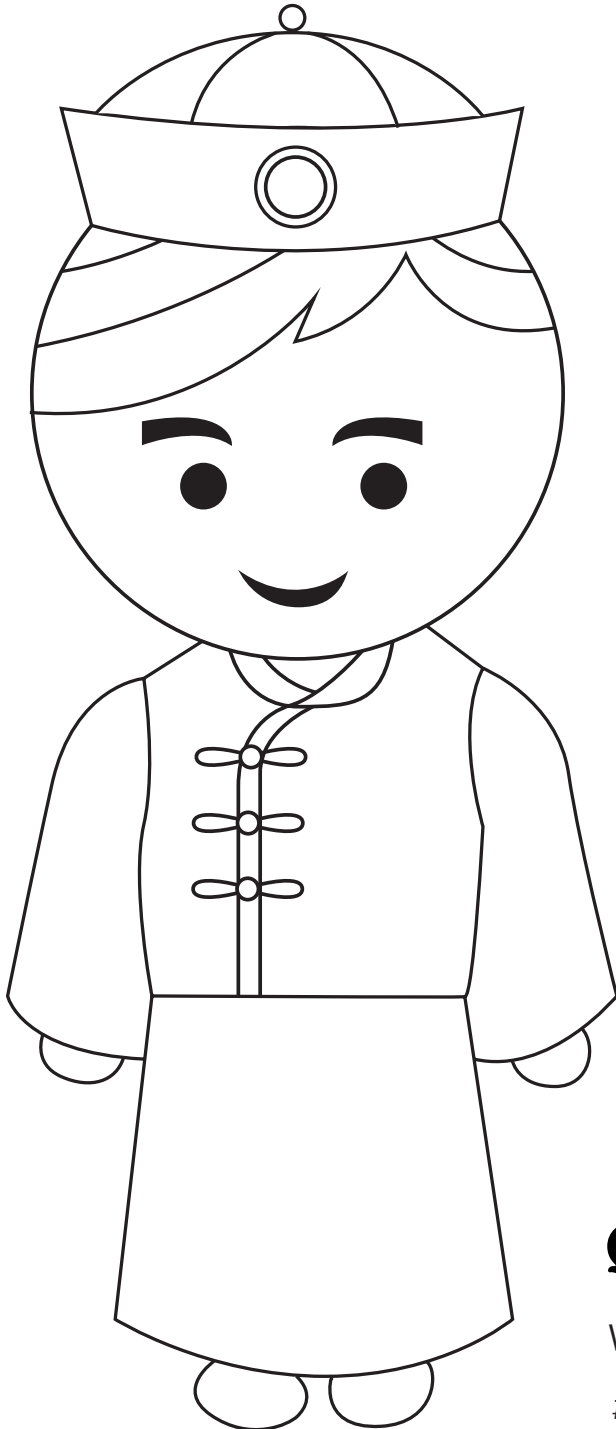

Question:

What is another name for Cheongsam?

Answer: Qi-Pao

China

Male Traditional Clothing

Changshan, also known as Changpao or Dagua is the male equivalent of the women's cheongsam (qi-pao). In traditional Chinese dress, a changshan literally means "long shirt."

Changshan was formal dress for Chinese men before Western-style suits became common in China.

They are traditionally worn in pictures, weddings, and other more formal historically Chinese events.

Question:

What does Changshan mean?

Answer: long shirt