

Writing Passages and Making Predictions

Read the example provided and make a prediction. Share the evidence on which you based your prediction. Then write your own short texts, weaving in clues as to what might happen next. After you have written your examples, swap papers with a classmate. Have them read your examples and make predictions, making sure that your classmate shares their evidence. Remember, this isn't about right or wrong answers, it's about making connections and thinking.

Nicholas shot up in bed. He looked at his alarm and realized that it never went off - HE OVERSLEPT! His dad was making a big breakfast that would be ready in about 45 minutes. This was the morning of his big dance recital and his stomach was already feeling queasy.

My prediction:

Evidence:

My prediction:

Evidence:

My prediction:

Evidence:

My prediction:

Evidence:
